

The Dreamcatcher

King Mawla's people believed that all dreams, good and bad, floated through the air at night. Lately, his people were having bad dreams that caused them to lie awake. When King Mawla saw what was happening, the king called for the weavers in the land to create dreamcatchers. This is what he said to them:

“Make it a circle, to bend and to bind,
To allow good dreams in and leave bad ones behind,
Weave it with string, a maze that's so fair,
Bad dreams are lost and again become air,
While good dreams come through a small hole in the center,
To be welcomed like loved ones who once again enter.”

The weavers created enough dreamcatchers for the families in King Mawla's land, and the people could sleep once again.
